Ann grew up in Hanover N.H. She distinguished herself as a bassoonist and one of the top students in her high school class and then attended Mount Holyoke College in the class of 1960 where she graduated with a degree in Zoology. Ann moved to Boston and for several years she worked in biology research labs at Wellesley and then at Harvard Medical School. Ann was also involved with folk dancing in Boston and in the 1960's travelled by motorcycle around Europe including Eastern Europe to learn their folk dances. Later she developed an interest in public health law and earned a law degree from Boston University Law School but, discouraged by changes in U.S. politics, she never practiced law. For the past several years, she was a devoted phone volunteer during fund drives for public radio station WBUR.
