

Carolyn Williams Loysen

Connie succumbed to the relentless ravages of breast cancer at home in Milton, DE with her family (husband Cliff, daughters Kirsten and Britt) at her side. Gail Morris Dillon writes: "I was able to visit Connie, her daughters and Cliff shortly before she died. She still had a little smile when I said hello. I will miss her very much."

Rocki Hill Hughes remembers: "Connie had such a great smile and a wonderful loopy attitude - with a lot of depth! She was very dear."

Connie lived most of her married life in Edison, NJ, and worked in the medical billing department of the New Jersey University of Medicine and Dentistry. Following retirement, the Loysens moved to Milton, DE. In her new life away from suburbia, Connie was active in her Episcopal Church, singing in the choir, and in fact, had just completed training as a lay minister. She was a docent for the Lewes Historical Society, an avid bridge player, an excellent baker, and enjoyed traveling world-wide and visits from her daughters and their families.
