

Sally Hike Mutch

September 7, 1993

In her tribute to Sally following her death, Connie Leighton Gray recalled Sally's love of Mount Holyoke and love of learning, both of which she held dearly throughout her life. Sally got her master's degree in microbiology at the University of Connecticut and pursued her lifelong dream of finding a cure for cancer until the end. She was a scientist always, in her academic studies, in her lifetime of extracurricular research, and in her daily life, always searching and analyzing. She was a shining light to her family which included four siblings, six children, three grandchildren and her beloved Ron. Likewise, in her community, Sally was a beacon - never just accepting what 'was', always finding ways to make things better, seeing a problem and solving it. All whose lives she touched were inspired by Sally's zest for learning, striving, appreciating, accomplishing and enjoying.
