Jan 18, 2017, 3:19 PM,

Hi All — Well, we're "in" up here in the White Mountains, in that we're having an official march (or rather, a gathering) here on Saturday from 11 am to 1 pm in Jackson NH on the town green in front of the grammar school in the middle of a big cross-country ski race -- and some of us are making pussyhats, wearing them, and distribution them to any one else who attends that wants to wear one.

What about the rest of you?

Check out the following websites if you don't know what I'm talking about:

Pussyhat Project is sweeping nation ahead of the Women's March on Washington.

Pink cat-ear hats are becoming the latest fashion trend among women across the country. So much so that it's sparked a run on pink yarn.

Planning to march in Boston, I went to the yarn store to buy some pink yarn. I ran into a friend there, also buying pink yarn. As we parted, we said that we'd see each other on the bus going from Cape Cod to Boston.

This morning I cast on 58 stiches...the instructions say 50 but I thought I'd be safer with 58. Then K2, P2...Good Lord, I couldn't remember how to purl...

So I'll be back at the yarn shop tomorrow to get further instructions.
Wishing the rest of you, better luck.

I brought a pink cat-ear hat home from Norway last summer, not even knowing that it has become a fashion trend. I just thought, I'm old enough to get away with wearing this. .

They just announced a march here in Santa Barbara so I will be doing that -- no pink hat though. Haven't knitted since MHC (also the last I played bridge!)

It seems that there are over 600 marches across the country and over 1.3 million sister marches. I am going to the one in Honolulu which starts at our State capitol. I have a pink camie hat to wear...

Edward and I are on a bus from Swarthmore to DC. We are not morning people and this bus is leaving at 7 AM so you know how much this means to us.

I'm so proud of you all! Take photos and send them with captions for me to post on the web site. I try to stay away from politics on the web, but this is different. Thanks.
